

The Royal Hampshire Regiment Museum

Access Guide

Thank you for planning a visit to the museum. We are located in a Grade II* listed building. This guide outlines how to access the museum and the support that is available.

Assistance dogs are welcome in the museum. There is no visitor parking at the museum.

Access from Southgate Street

Visitors who require assistance to access the museum will find a doorbell attached to our advertising A-board on Southgate street. It is labelled as the access doorbell. We will come outside when it is pressed to offer assistance.

There is one step from Southgate Street into the museum garden. The garden path is paved and can be uneven. On reaching the museum, there is a further shallow step up and a shallow step down to enter the building. The doors are not automatic.

There are lightweight foldable gallery chairs in the museum that visitors are welcome to use.

The toilet cubicles are a standard size and are not wide enough for a wheelchair.

The fire escape at the rear of the building has a step to access it. In the event of an evacuation, staff will check the gallery and assist visitors to leave.

Inside the Museum

There is a small TV in one of the cases in the first room that shows historic newsreels. Some of the reels play quiet music. There are no other AV presentations. A clock chimes every fifteen minutes.

There are mannequins in the museum. They are highly realistic with realistic facial features.

The museum tells stories of conflict and loss. These stories are sensitively handled.
